- △ As an EU citizen, you are entitled to study at any EU university under the same conditions as nationals. However, conditions of entry vary significantly between individual countries and universities. Regardless of the other entry conditions, you may not be refused access to training or education in another EU country on grounds of your nationality. Knowledge of the host country language may be required, so in some EU countries you may be asked to take a language test.

Sample story

Battista from Italy wanted to study in Ireland. Because he didn't know about the centralised university application system there (CAO), he missed the deadline for applications and had to wait until the following academic year.

2 If you are a student, you may have a chance to do part of your studies abroad or complete a traineeship in a company through Erasmus .

If you are interested in doing part of your studies abroad, you should first contact your own university.

When you go abroad to study via Erasmus :

- you don't have to pay registration or tuition fees to your host university
- your studies abroad count as an integral part of your degree
- you get an EU grant towards living and travel expenses.

Your home university must recognise your period of study abroad as counting towards your degree, provided you complete the study programme agreed in advance of your exchange.

- 3 With Erasmus Mundus, you can enrol in a postgraduate degree programme jointly offered by universities based in different EU countries - in certain cases, even outside Europe. You study or conduct research in at least two countries - and are awarded a joint, double or multiple degree as a result. Scholarships for Erasmus Mundus are available for students from Europe and all over the world.

Erasmus Mundus scholarships can also support partnerships with universities from a range of countries and regions across the world.

These partnerships provide scholarships for European students to study in non-EU countries, and for non-Europeans to come to EU universities.

- 4 Joost is a Dutch student who moved to Belgium to study. He works part-time at a restaurant on a contract under Belgian law. His employer deducts taxes and social security from his monthly pay checks and pays contributions for him to the Belgian authorities.

During his summer holidays, Joost works full-time in his native town in the Netherlands. His employer there pays contributions for him to the Dutch tax authorities. Joost, who is a Belgian resident for tax purposes, can either request a refund from the Dutch authorities and then pay the applicable income taxes in Belgium, or declare the income earned in the Netherlands and the taxes already paid there to have a tax discount from Belgian authorities instead.

- 5 If you are planning to move to another EU country to study, you must have sufficient income to live there without needing income support. Income can come from different sources, such as your parents, your spouse, or, of course, work.

As an EU citizen, you will have the same right to work while studying as nationals of that country. You will not need a work permit, even to work full-time.

If you live in another EU country for more than 6 months a year there (183 days) you will be considered tax-resident there. Consequently, if you work while studying, you will have to pay taxes and social security contributions on income earned in the country where you study.

- 6 Kathrin completed a university degree in Germany. She then moved to France to pursue a postgraduate degree, but found that the French authorities did not recognise her diploma, requesting that she obtain a document certifying her qualifications from a French university. After discussion with a French university, she was able to get her degree recognised as equivalent to a "licence" in the French system – a type of diploma obtained there after only 3 years of study, and which she felt covered much less ground than the studies she had already completed in Germany. Nonetheless, she had to pursue 2 further years of undergraduate study in the French system before she could apply for the postgraduate course she wanted there.

- 7 If you are an EU national, you do not need to show your national ID card or passport when you are travelling from one border-free Schengen EU country to another.

It is still always highly recommended to take a passport or ID card with you, so you can prove your identity if needed (if stopped by police, boarding a plane, etc.).

Sample story

Lars is Swedish and holidaying in Spain. He took his ID card issued by a bank with him - in Sweden, it's accepted as proof of identity.

But Lars could get into trouble if the Spanish authorities want to check his identity, because the only valid ID documents they recognise are national ID cards and passports issued by the Swedish authorities.

Check the conditions attached to your country's student grants

- 8 Johs is a Dane who decided to embark on a two-year Master's degree course in the Netherlands after four years of studying in the United States. At that time, the Danish government provided maintenance grants to Danish students for a maximum of six years. However, there was a four-year cap on the number of years a Danish student could receive this grant if the studies were outside Denmark. Johs was not aware of this condition; as he had been receiving the grant for four years in the United States, he was unfortunately left with no grant during his course in the Netherlands.

Studying, training and volunteering in the European Union

Learning in Europe

9 The European Union helps its member countries in their efforts to provide the best education and training opportunities for their citizens. It also promotes language learning in Europe by:

- attracting more teachers and students to teach and learn languages
- encouraging students, trainees, teachers and young people to travel and study/work abroad
- building networks to share knowledge and experience

Whether you want to study, train or volunteer, there are a number of EU programmes that can help you further your education, skills and personal development in many EU countries.

I've just completed my upper secondary schooling in my home country. Can I start university in another EU country without any experience of higher (tertiary) education in my home country?

- AO In principle, you can go to university in another EU country. But bear in mind that each country is free to stipulate the level of secondary education future students need for university admission. This will be explained in the pre-application information provided by the university you hope to apply to.

What documents do I need to study in another EU country?

That depends on the country, the university and the course itself. As a general rule, you should have:

- the originals of all your relevant academic qualifications
- a CV (e.g. the Europass CV).

11 As EU citizens, your children are entitled to attend school in any EU country under the same conditions as nationals of that country.

They have the right to be placed in a class with their own age group, at the equivalent level to their class in your country of origin - regardless of their language level.

Be aware that the school system in your new home country may be very different from what you are used to. In some countries, for example, children are separated very early into academic or vocational streams.

This is why there is no automatic EU-wide recognition of school certificates. In some countries, you must ask the national authorities to recognise your children's school certificates before you can enrol them in a local school.

Recognition of academic diplomas

- A2 I'm trying to get my degree from a Dutch university recognised in Spain. The Spanish Ministry of Education has asked me to provide confirmation that my Dutch university follows the Bologna process. I thought the Diploma Supplement would be enough, but the Spanish authorities say it isn't.

The Diploma Supplement is designed to help you get your degree recognised, but it cannot guarantee this. If it states that your university uses the ECTS (European Credit Transfer System) - an initiative under the Bologna process - this might go some way towards convincing the Spanish Ministry of Education.

Recognition of academic diplomas - FAQ

Λ3 My son completed the first 2 years of a pharmacy degree in Hungary, but didn't finish his studies. Now he would like to continue studying in Bulgaria. Can he transfer the credits he earned? Sofia University has told him this is not possible because he took his exams in Hungary over 5 years ago. Is there a time limit?

It is up to the Bulgarian university to decide this. There are no EU rules to oblige universities to recognise ECTS credits. The European Credit Transfer system is a tool of the Council of Europe, a separate international organisation.
