| Research focus area  | Narrative analysis – German Studies – German linguistics – memory studies   |
| Department   | Department of Modern Languages and Culture  |
| Short description of the department/laboratory/ research group   | My present research aims at mapping the places and the chronotopes of the so-called Israelkorpus, a (mostly) German-language collection of interviews with German speaking Jews, who emigrated from Central Europe to Palestine/Israel mainly between 1933 and 1939. The mapping will show the relationship between memory, places, and the related linguistic coding within both memory and the narrative process of the interview, which is therefore also linked to the emotional dimension. |
